PUT FINISHING

Built Road Across Mountains of Alaska

ANCHORAGE, Alaska, July 8.-Finishing touches this summer are being put on the construction of the $57,000.000 trunk railroad, which the United States government has built across the Alaska mountains to conneet Fairbanks and Nenanna, on the territory's great interior river system, with the tidewater points of Anchorage and Seward.

Alaska now wants farmers and miners and settlers to populate the territory to provide business for the railroad. Already the road is carrying coal from the mines along its route and mining along the road has been stimulated by the better transportation, but the traffic is not yet nearly enough to tax the road.

The road was built by the Alaska given instead. The titles held by engineering commission, which was regions have been taken out of created in 1915 by the government.
